COMPOUND OXYGEN TREATMENT
The National Cure for Chronic Diseases.

U. S. COMPOUND OXYGEN CO.,

A Sick Person said not long ago—"Oh, if I HAD only known of the Oxygen sooner."

BUT—READ THIS:

Garland, May 11, '89.

Mr. S. B. Sweetser.

Dear Sir—My little boy's health, Frank A. Morton, seems to be improving every day. He gains in flesh and strength fast. He walks about out doors a good deal. I think that the Compound Oxygen has done wonders for him. It has been four weeks since he began the Oxygen Treatment. He could not stand alone then. Now he is running about out doors.

I wish that your precious medicine might reach the home of every sufferer. That it might gladden the hearts of every afflicted one as it has ours in the recovery of our little one. Wishing you success I remain,

Yours truly, MRS. MARK MORTON.

When this little fellow (five years old) began taking the Oxygen, he was not expected to live three weeks.

EXCITEMENT INTENSE.

Pinkerton's Men Protecting Men Against Strikers at the Homestead Works.

PITTSBURG, Pa., July 12. One hundred armed Pinkerton men are to-day protecting the men at the Homestead works of Carnegie, Phipps & Co., at Homestead, against possible attacks by the strikers. The struggle promises to be the most bitter in the history of strikes in this section. Everything is quiet this morning.

At noon 125 deputies arrived at Homestead. They were immediately surrounded by the strikers, to the number of nearly 1,000, and requested to return to the city. The deputies refused to do so, and the crowd would not allow them to enter the mill. At 1.30 they were still surrounded by the mob but no outbreak had occurred. The excitement is intense.

A RESORT OF THIEVES.

High-handed Robberies in Kansas.

ATCHISON, Kansas, July 12. The Sac and Fox Indian reservation, just north of Doniphan and Brown counties, has become the refuge of thugs, murderers and highwaymen and the authorities seem powerless to suppress them. They carry on their warfare so boldly that an effort will probably be made with the government at Washington to secure the abandonment of the reservation and the removal of the few Indians living on it to the Indian Territory. Farmers and others are held up almost weekly by these criminals and in their treatment of their victims they do not hesitate at murder. Last week a number of railroad men were sand bagged and robbed and a few days before two farmers were held up at a bridge and their possessions taken. The inhabitants of the locality live in terror of these criminals.

AN ENGLISH SCHEME

To Build a $40,000,000 Railroad in Honduras.

WASHINGTON, July 12. D. W. Herring, American consul at Tegucigalpa, says the English have undertaken an enterprise which looks like an English colonization of Honduras, with a possible annexation in the future. An English syndicate, with a capital of $40,000,000, is about to build a railway across the republic of Honduras, which will open to the world a most important highway for the trade and commerce of all countries. The English company expects to have the road completed in three years.

Consul Herring continues: "What a pity this great work will not owe its completion, as it does its design, to American genius and design. Our people had been informed of the superior advantages of this railway over all others for a trans-isthmus route, by E. G. Squires, who was the American representative at Honduras some years ago and who designed this road. The English will gain much, financially, politically and commercially, by the success of this project."

WILL IT END IN GAS.

Another Movement of British Capital.

CHICAGO, July 12. The Tribune of this morning says that representatives of a British syndicate are in Chicago for the purpose of buying the gas trusts plants and they propose to furnish gas at twenty-five cents per thousand feet. The syndicate proposes to organize a company with a capital of $20,000,000 and to put in plants for making cheap gas all over the United States.

THE PARNELL COMMISSION.

The Hearing Adjourned Until Tuesday.

LONDON, July 12. Before the Parnell commission today Loames, solicitor for the Times, was recalled. He said that LeCaron having lost employment in the government service, would be provided for by the Times as long as he needed assistance. Houston, secretary of the Loyal and Patriotic Union, was also recalled. He testified that he had borrowed 450 pounds from Lord Stallbridge and Sir Roland Blennerhasset and 850 pounds from Dr. Maguire to purchase the Pigott letters printed by the Times. Sir Charles Russell demanded the production of the books of the Loyal and Patriotic Union. He said he desired to prove that the whole indictments contained in the "Parnellism and Crime" articles proceeded from this Union.

Mr. Pigott, he said, had been used by a powerful political organization to concert the plan. Attorney General Webster contended that the books were wanted to give the Parnellites free range upon other political matters. The court decided against the application for the production of the books. Sir Charles Russell then intimated that he had received written instructions from Parnell regarding the further conduct of the case, which required him to ask for an opportunity to consider his position. Parnell, Davitt and Lewis and Sir Charles Russell thereupon withdrew from the court room and the commission adjourned until Tuesday.

A CHAPTER OF CRIMES.

Murder and Suicide.

DENVER, Col., July 12. Ed Henderson, a gambler, last night shot his mistress, Della Thompson, inflicting serious wounds. He then committed suicide.

Wife Murder and Suicide.

AUSLEY, Neb., July 12. Joseph F. Moorly, living near here, shot and killed his wife Wednesday night. He then shot himself dead. There had been some trouble about the treatment of their children.

Wife Murderer Hung by a Mob.

LAFAYETTE, La., July 12. An armed body of men, consisting of about 150 whites and 30 colored men, rode into town yesterday morning, broke open the parish jail and took therefrom Felix Kels, colored, who last Tuesday murdered his wife. He was taken to the scene of his crime and executed by the mob.

ACCIDENTALLY KILLED.

A Yale Student's Fatal Ride.

SOUTH AMBOY, N. J., July 12. Alexander Parker, a Yale college student, while riding on top of a freight train last night was struck by a bridge and instantly killed.

STATE NEWS.

Androscoggin.

The little daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Reynolds died at Norton's Block on Whipple street, Lewiston, Monday forenoon. The father of the deceased child is the one who, in a drunken state, tried to commit suicide by taking laudanum some time ago. About ten weeks ago he disappeared from the city and has not been heard of since. His wife is in a very destitute condition and in very feeble health. She has a little boy five years of age. The city allows her $1.50 per week to pay her rent, buy provisions and clothe herself and child, which is hardly a sufficient allowance for them to live on.

Aroostook.

Shipped from Houlton station for the week ending July 6th, the following carloads: Extract, 2; lumber, 18; miscellaneous, 6; shingles, 10; leather, 2; laths, 2; ship knees, 1. Total, 41 cars.

There is one man confined in our jail for a debt he could pay, so many think, if inclined to, says the Pioneer. He has a farm worth $800, and receives a pension. He claims that his wife owns the farm and that his pension money is needed by his family. He even asks the commissioners to clothe him. The man whom he owes has made provision in his will for the debtor's board, and affirms that he will have to pay the debt or die behind the bars.

Cumberland.

Word has been received from Simmons, the sculptor, that the model of the large figure to surmount the Portland Soldiers' Monument is nearly finished and he hopes to have the statue completed before winter.

The honorary degree of doctor of divinity was conferred upon the pastor of Free Street Church, of Portland, Rev. A. T. Dunn, by Central University, Pella, Iowa, at its recent commencement. This is the college of which Dr. Dunn's father was president for so many years.

On the Fourth, at Great Diamond Island some boys were playing with powder. A fire-cracker, carelessly ignited, caused the powder to explode and five of the boys were burned, one, named Smith, so seriously that he fainted and will lose the use of his hands for several weeks.

Over two thousand persons went on the excursion for the benefit of the orphans at Little Diamond Island, Wednesday, and had an enjoyable time. They were transported by the Casco Bay Steamboat Company on their regular trips instead of in one boat as has been the usual custom, and the arrangement worked to great satisfaction. The day was spent in various ways, dancing being a leading amusement.

Kennebec.

Mr. G. Arthur Harlow, son of ex-Superintendent Harlow, and a recent graduate of Amherst College, has been appointed in charge of the medical department at the Insane Hospital.

A horse was stolen from Mr. Charles Trask's stable at Gardiner, the other night, and was found the next morning on his way back to the stable, evidently having got away from the thief, as the halter was broken.

A woman named Little was recently arrested in Hallowell. She had been living in a place so filthy that the Gardiner News considers it fortunate that an epidemic of some contagious disease has not originated there. The place, it is stated, has been a resort of young boys.

The board of managers of the National Home, D. V. S., are making their annual visit to the Eastern Branch at Togus. They came from Boston on the steamer Kennebec, Wednesday, to Gardiner and were driven to Togus. Capt. Augustus L. Smith, of Portland, formerly of Augusta, and ex-U. S. Marshal, was appointed chief clerk of the home. He will assume his position at once.

Somerset.

Prof. J. H. Parsons, formerly principal of Maine Central Institute, has been elected principal of the Cony High School at Augusta, with a salary of $1,000. This is one of the best positions in the High Schools of the State.

A disastrous fire was narrowly averted at Fairfield a few days ago. Fire was discovered in the lumber dry-house of the Durens, and as a strong wind prevailed, nothing but the good protection by the water supply from fire saved an extensive conflagration.

Waldo.

At J. A. M. Thursday, fire broke out in Searsport Manufacturing Co.'s clothing factory and the building and contents valued at $1,000 are a total loss; insured for $2,000. One hundred and fifteen hands were employed by the company.

York.

The Old Orchard Beach Campmeeting Associations have been making many improvements in their grounds. They have erected a new fence around the auditorium, built two ticket offices and a post office and closets, and connected the auditorium with the church. A small admission fee will be charged. All money collected will be used to improve the grounds.

OUR GREATEST INVENTOR'S FIRST LOCOMOTIVE ENGINE.

LOCAL MATTERS.

Miss Maud Ware is spending a few days at Islesboro.

Mr. G. W. Fisk, a prominent citizen of Medway, was in the city yesterday.

Mr. G. W. Harriman, of the firm of Allen & Harriman, went up river on a short business trip.

The schooner Alfred W. Fisk sailed yesterday for Richmond, Va., with a cargo of ice from F. W. Ayer & Co.

Mrs. E. S. Gorham and Mrs. Lane and family are passing the summer at their cottage at Northport Campground.

The schooner Addie G. Bryant was cleared yesterday by Pierre McConville for Curacoa with a cargo of ice and lumber.

Miss Kate Webber, of Houlton, who has been visiting friends in this city for a short time, has gone to Searsport where she will visit.

Work will be finished to-day on loading the barge The Roman with ice at the Arctic ice houses, for Philadelphia. She is a large barge and will carry a large cargo of ice.

Miss Andrews, of Rockland, who has been the guest of Miss Chapman at the Bangor House, returned home yesterday on the Katahdin, accompanied by Miss Chapman, who will visit her.

Miss Dora Wiley, Miss Bertha Milliken and Mr. E. C. Adams will participate in a concert at Camden on the evening of the 20th of this month, the evening following the concert to be given in Rockland. A quartette from Rockland and other talent will take part in the concert at Camden.

The E. P. Sullivan Company has been playing to good houses in Dover this week, and did a good business. They left there to fulfil their engagement at Old Town. They play later at Bar Harbor. Mr. James P. Forrest has been traveling with them, representing Mr. F. A. Owen.

Mr. Charles Currier and Mr. White, of Brewer, are building residences on Prospect street, in Brewer. They have a fine situation on the hill a short distance above the toll bridge. Several new houses have been built and are building in the new city and quite a boom seems to have located there.

The barge Mercedita has arrived in port and will load ice at the Penobscot Ice Company's house for Philadelphia. She has been here once before this season. During the Civil War she was a gunboat, being then a barkentine, run by steam, and did good service at that time. It is merely another instance of "How are the mighty fallen".

A party of about thirty go to Kineo today over the Bangor & Piscataquis Railroad from Bar Harbor. It is one of the Raymond excursions and left Boston the first of the week. The party will stay at that delightful resort until Tuesday when they return. The members can not fail to be charmed with Moosehead Lake and its surroundings.

The "Out of Bondage" Company which played at the Opera House on Thursday evening will play at Milo, Guilford and Dover this week as well as many of the small towns in this vicinity. They ought to be able to draw large houses with their band as an inducer. The country roads ought to be in good condition at this time of the year.

The team which will represent Bangor on the ball field this year, is practicing regularly every morning for about two hours at Maplewood. Sweeney and Donahue, who have been playing with the Concords arrived last night, making ten men in all reported on duty. The team shows up well in practice and seem to work well. Sweeney was one of the members of the Belfast team two years ago. Two games will be played next week, the first one being on Tuesday with the Walthams.

People are commencing to congregate at Fort Point to spend the summer, or a part of it and there are quite a number of guests at the hotel. Under the management of Mr. Peakes the hotel is conducted in a first class manner. The hotel is one of the best on the coast and the situation of Fort Point is delightful. Nearly all of the cottages are occupied. The cool weather with which we have been favored has, of course, kept many away from the seashore, but by the last of this month the one will probably be the usual exodus from the cities to the cooling breezes of the salt sea air.

There is quite a large number of cottages and transient pleasure seekers at Northport Campground, many more being there this year than at the same time last year. Most of the cottages are occupied and the resort is assuming quite a gay aspect. The cottages are renting well and it bids fair to be a good season. Some changes have been made about the grounds which will considerably improve them and be much more convenient. There is no prospect of a hotel being built this year as no steps have been taken with that end in view. Next year a new hotel may be erected, at least, that is among the possibilities. Some of the large cottages are now being used as boarding houses and there seems to be ample accommodations for all.

PINK SOCIABLE. Notwithstanding the doubtful appearance of the weather the Pink sociable given by the Young People's Christian League of Crosbyville Chapel on Thursday evening was a decided success. The room was tastefully decorated with pink drapery and a profusion of flowers. At eight o'clock the following program was presented: Banjo duett, Mr. and Mrs. ...; song, Miss Henry; reading, Miss ...; ... [illegible]

The wire fence enclosing Davenport Square received some necessary repairs yesterday. It has been in rather a shaky condition in some places and will be much more sightly by a bracing up.

The game of base ball which was being arranged to occur at Winterport to-day, between a picked nine of this city and a team from Winterport and Frankfort has been given up, on account of several of the players being unable to go. It may occur next week, probably Saturday.

VESSEL NEWS. The four-masted schooner Frank T. Stinson is loading ice at D. Sargent's Sons ice house for Philadelphia.—The fourmasted schooner George A. MacFarlen is loading ice at the Union ice houses for Washington.—The schooner Cassie Jameson will load ice at the Union ice house for Philadelphia.—The shooner Menowa is loading ice at D. Sargent's Sons for New York.—The schooner Luther A. Roble is loading ice at E. & I. K. Stetson's houses for Washington.—The schooner Samuel H. Walker finished loading to-day at the Kineo ice houses for Baltimore.—The schooner South Shore will take her place and also take a cargo for Baltimore.

"GOOD FOR NOTHING." Miss Dora Wiley will give the play entitled, "Good for Nothing" assisted by some of the best local talent in a few weeks. Some pleasing music will be introduced and the entertainment is expected to be a most enjoyable one. It has not yet been decided where it will be given. The play is said to be a very amusing one, and will undoubtedly attract a large audience. In the fall or the early part of the winter Miss Wiley intends to give that bright and pleasing opera, "The Daughter of the Regiment" which was presented here for the first time by the new American Opera Company. Miss Wiley will, of course, assume the leading soprano role, and she will be assisted by many of the best singers in the city, as well as some outside talent. An event of this kind would be of great interest to all and would doubtless be liberally patronized. A great many have expressed a desire to have "Pinafore" revived and presented in this city by local talent, principally. It is thought that the opera which is always enjoyable, would have quite a run.

Short Cuts.

The crops of Prince Edward Island promise to be the best ever known.

A woman at Pittsburg Pa., on being arrested for some misdemeanor convulsively hugged her baby so violently in bidding it good-bye that she squeezed it to death.

A "Medieval Fayre" is to be held at Croydon, England, in the old palace where Queen Elizabeth once stayed for seven days. The object is to raise funds toward the restoration of the ancient pile.

White Caps tried to flog August Belz at Appleton, Wis., Sunday night, but he drew a bowie knife and slashed right and left. One man is fatally injured and a half a dozen others slightly.

Mrs. Frances Hodgson Burnett has been engaged to edit the children's department of a syndicate of English and American newspapers, for which she is to receive $7500 a year.

A writer in "The St. Louis Globe-Democrat" says that you can drive every mosquito and fly out of a room and keep them out by occasionally burning a small lump of gum camphor in the room. The best way is to put the camphor on a piece of iron heated very hot.

Very large orders have recently been received at Birmingham from the German and French governments for war-balloons. The German War Office has adopted parachutes, as their value for campaigning purposes has been clearly demonstrated by some recent experiments at Spandau.

A woman artist in London has had the courage to exhibit her line of flower paintings on one side of the gallery which was filled on the opposite side with the genuine articles. Such an opportunity to judge of realistic art seldom is given to picture lovers.

Romantic spinster—"Excuse me, sir, but is not this the spot where that beautiful girl fell into the water last summer, and was so gallantly rescued by the gentleman who afterward married her?" Practical bachelor (giving her a penetrating glance)—"Yes, ma'am, but I can't swim."

A citizen of Chicago resorted to an ingenious device for scattering a crowd. He was hemmed in by a dense crowd during a circus procession, and taking a bottle of ammonia from his pocket he spilled the contents promiscuously about. In less than a minute he had the whole sidewalk to himself.

William Knable, the first baseman of the Johnstown (Pa.) baseball team, was about to Marry Miss Abler on the evening of the fatal disaster. He and his fiancee were waiting for the clergyman when the flood rushed down and separated them. Both escaped drowning and their wedding was celebrated last week.

The Vicomtesse de Courval, an American, is so esteemed in the Parisian world of fashion that gossip declares that were she to fall from the top of the Eiffel Tower countless fair Parisiennes would be driven to commit suicide in the same way in the mere and vain hope that they would "imitate her graceful descent."

Emma Skye, a Chippewa squaw, daughter of Chief Two Skies of the Sky, was married recently at East Superior, Wis., to Tom McNaughton, a white man. They were to have been married some time ago, but owing to opposition from McNaughton's relatives it was postponed. She ownes pine lands worth $15,000.

The opium habit is on the increase on the Pacific coast, the white population readily acquiring the taste which has proved so terrible a curse to the Chinese. The crude drug is shipped from Hong Kong to Victoria, British Columbia. It is there manufactured into a mixture suitable for smoking, and then sent into California.

A sensation was created in Paris a week or two ago by the arrest of three well-known bankers on the suspicion that they were concerned with the disappearance of a Swiss named Caudrian. The latter had been a servant of a Mme. Fessart, and at her death received her fortune of 300,000 francs. His riches drove him demented, and since he disappeared the bankers with whom he deposited his money have been arrested.

New York city is a curious place. At the upper end of Central Park, between Sixth and Eighth avenues, and one of the most magnificent building sites in the whole metropolis, is a vast area used for vegetable gardens and by florists. Above it stretch away for miles streets of brick and stone buildings; but there is no sign of any endeavor to improve this tract. Around it is a fringe of shanties and second-class hotels.

The Italian Bersaglieri, or riflemen, are taught a marching gait which astonishes the military men of other nations. A Bersaglieri regiment stationed at Cremona recently made a forced march of about seven and one-sixth miles in seventy-three minutes. After a halt of half an hour the regiment set out on its return, marching without a pause to Cremona, and passing in review at double time as fresh as if they had not covered fourteen miles in three hours.

A shrewd game was pursued by some burglars at Napa, Cal. They called at a house and asked to be shown over it, saying they wished to purchase just such a one. The family were absent and the person in charge complied with the request. Noticing that one or two closets in one of the chambers were locked, they, saying that an abundance of closet room was what they wished, expressed a desire to have these opened. The lady said the parties were away, and these closets were kept locked at their request. After some urging, the lady went to a bureau and from one of the drawers took a bunch of keys, and the closets were thrown open to the inspection of the strangers, who pretended to be entirely satisfied. That night they entered through one of the windows, went to the room mentioned, took the keys from the drawer and rifled the trunks in the closet of many valuables.

The Magazines.

Readers of THE NORTH AMERICAN REVIEW for July will, perhaps, turn with the most eager interest to the pages which contain tender and graceful tributes to its late editor and proprietor, Allen Thorndike Rice. They are from the pens of his intimate friends and companions, the Hon. William Waldorf Astor, the Hon. Edwards Pierrepont, General William T. Sherman, and the Hon. Lloyd Bryce. The number opens with a strong and—in view of the college "commencement" season—timely symposium on Discipline in American Colleges. It contains answers to the question, How far Should a University Control its Students? by President Bartlett of Dartmouth College, President Angell of the University of Michigan, Professor N. S. Shaler, of Harvard, President Adams of Cornell University, President Hyde of Bowdoin College, Sir J. W. Dawson, Principal and Vice Chancellor of McGill University, Montreal, and President Davis of the University of California. Adjutant-General Wolseley furnishes the second instalment of An English View of the Civil War. Professor Richard T. Ely, of Johns Hopkins University, pleads in favor of Government control of the telegraph system, contending that it would be cheaper and more satisfactory than the present method. The future of the Navy is discussed by Rear-Admiral S. B. Luce. Justin McCarthy writes in an entertaining and instructive way about The Throne in England. Miss Kate Field's incisive pen portrays most vividly the prevailing ignorance of Alaska, and contends that we have by no means realized our possibilities in that quarter of the United States. William Mathews, LL. D., writes strongly of The Negro Intellect, which, in his opinion, supported by a convincing array of facts, is in no sense inferior to that of the Caucasian race. General Charles H. T. Collis sketches some of his recent experiences in Washington. The Notes and Comments are particularly varied and interesting. Maurice Thompson writes of Foreign Influence on American Fiction; Felix L. Oswald furnishes some suggestive American Auguries; and the Rev. J. B. Wasson points out a short and easy method of Abolishing Poverty—on Paper. The Future of the Newspaper and Thought-Transference are among the other subjects considered.

The Railroad Question.

BANGOR'S DELEGATION BEFORE INTER-STATE COMMERCE COMMITTEE.

In addition to statement submitted by C. P. Stetson, Esq., to the Inter-State Commerce committee, already published in the WHIG, the Boston Journal prints the remarks of the other Bangor gentlemen, as follows:

Mr. J. P. Bass next addressed the committee. He said that if the pro rata arrangement referred to by Mr. Stetson as contained in the charter granted the International Railway were enforced upon the Canadian roads, those roads could not work to the injury of the American roads. He would provide that the Canadian roads should not carry freight of the same class through any section of the United States for themselves, if it was Canadian freight or American freight, at a less rate per mile than that freight could be taken off and delivered to a connecting railroad; and the American shippers should have this freight carried at just as low a rate per mile, and passengers should be carried at just as low a rate per mile through our territory, as the Canadian roads carried it through their own territory.

Mr. A. M. Devereaux, of Bangor, next addressed the committee as the representative of the Castine Railway and Navigation Company and of the inhabitants of Castine. He said that the principal point he wished to make in regard to Castine was as a terminus, and that point might, perhaps, be as well covered as in any way, by quoting the following from a communication from the Selectmen of Castine to the committee:

"Should our Government grant to the Canadian Pacific Railway the privilege of operating a fast mail and passenger route through the State of Maine via Halifax to Europe, and grant the bonding privilege through Maine, on all freight the final destination of which is in the maritime provinces, and on all freight originating in the maritime provinces the final destination of which is beyond the western limits of our State, we think our Government should protect our interests and encourage the development of our section by demanding that all European bound freight originating in United States ... should be shipped ... United States terminus. ... [illegible]

the Pacific, cross this continent, and then across the Atlantic, running right around our steamship lines and our railroads, to the exclusion of our terminals, and they are bound for Halifax, the only chance we have to protect our interests is to "freeze on to them" when they go across the State of Maine.

At present the chances for the roads increasing the haul by going to Halifax instead of Maine ports, were good because of subsidies offered. He had the impression that the Canadian Pacific was being forced to go to Halifax by the Government against its will. To his mind freight coming into American territory should be exported from American ports. Mr. Devereaux then described the advantages of the harbor of Castine as a ship port, and thought it was the best point for a transcontinental terminus.

To Mr. Gorman he said that the Canadian Government had offered a subsidy of half a million for the shortest line to the seaboard on Canadian territory. The real object was military and political, the competition with American roads coming in as a side issue. The Grand Trunk was just as much a competitor of the Canadian roads as the American roads. In his mind there was no doubt that the only way to keep the export business was to improve conditions on the Canadian roads passing through the State of Maine, so that they could not profitably carry the freight to Halifax. If Eastern Maine ports could not get this freight, then shut the Canadian roads out and let some other trans-continental line bring the freight to Portland, Boston or New York.

Guy's Great Mile.

CLEVELAND TRACK COVERED IN 2.11 1-2.

Guy trotted a wonderful mile at the Cleveland Driving Park Wednesday, on a bet of $1 between his owner, W. J. Gordon, and President William Edwards of the Cleveland Driving Park Company, Mr. Gordon betting that Guy would not and Mr. Edwards that the gelding would break his record, 2.12¼. The track was harrowed, and after two warming up miles in 2.25 and 2.33, Millard Sanders brought the little wonder out and sent him away on the second trip under the wire.

He went to the furlong in 16 seconds and the quarter in 33¾; the second and third quarters, the fastest of the track, were each made in 32¼. This brought him to the three quarter pole in 1.38¼. Guy lagged a little on the seventh furlong, which took him 17½ seconds to cover, but he finished strong and fast, doing the last quarter in 33¼ and the mile in 2.11½.

It was a wonderful performance considering the conditions. The temperature was 91 degrees and no runner urged him home. He wore seven and one-half ounce shoes, and two ounce weights. Clingstone couldn't trot in better than 2.19 under the same circumstances. The timers were William Edwards, William B. Fasig and H. Devereaux.

The Cleveland Driving Park Company is trying to arrange, as the special attraction for its meeting, a race between Guy and Jay-Eye-See for a $5,000 purse, and will engage Axtell, 2.15¼, to go against the stallion record—Maxy Cobb's 2.13¼—at the same meeting, with a rich prize for success.

Printer's Pi.

HOW IT IS PRODUCED AND WHAT PRINTERS THINK OF IT.

[B. H. Colegrove in the Buffalo Evening News.]

To those who have never visited the composing room of a printing office and who do not know what printer's pi is, a brief description of that article may be of interest.

Every letter and character on the pages of this paper represent a piece of metal about three-quarters of an inch long, and these pieces, thousands in number are held together in an iron frame by thin strips of wood or metal between the columns, and wedges driven in all round close to the frame to keep the matter in proper position. It is while carrying the frame around in a careless manner, or when something jars it, that the wedges sometimes tumble out, and the thousands of pieces of metal fall like water out of a sieve and form what is called printer's pi. A frame or chaseful of type is sensitive as a plate of glass, and has to be handled with extreme care if pi would be avoided. Printer's pi can be made in the jerk of a lamb's tail, but it costs lots of money, and people in printing offices are not at all fond of it.

Printer's pi is not necessarily the pi of printers. It is often what might be called chumps' or strangers' pi. When a stranger comes into a printing office he is quite liable to become inquisitive and stroll into the composing room to ask some one if he thinks it is going to rain, and while waiting for an answer he becomes tired and leans against one of the imposing stones on which rests a page of freshly set matter that the foreman is about to tie up and take down to the press room. The stranger brushes his elbow over the page of type and it is strangers' pi. It is the custom in most offices for the employes, after dropping the stranger down the elevator shaft to ring for an ambulance, but if they are very busy they let his friends hunt him up.

Printers' pi is vexatious, but strangers' pi is dangerous and sometimes fatal. If a stranger or outside party, who hasn't any particular business to attend to, feels an irresistible desire to visit the composing room, or green room, of the printing office to ask some one the price of butter and run his elbow through a page of select reading matter—if he feels that kind of a desire, we say he had better try to smother it. Otherwise some high-strung printer with large, muscular fingers may do it for him.

Sand Spout in the Desert.

GRAPHIC DESCRIPTION OF A STRIKING SCENE IN AFRICA—MOVING COLUMNS.

Under the fairest skies the desert is an awesome solitude, but when a storm comes it is terrible and appalling. I shall never forget a scene I witnessed some forty miles beyond the great pyramids. I had gained an isolated hillock, some two hundred feet above the level of the surrounding desert. Away to the west, about two miles distant, I descried six or seven lofty pillars of sand moving swiftly over the undulating plain. The center one of these was vertical, and those surrounding it, at a distance of 200 or 300 yards, leaned slightly toward it. The sand at the base of the columns was lashed by the furious whirlwind into a surging sea. Desert trees of the hardest wood were torn up, with their roots, and hurled hundreds of yards away and high up into the air; even the grass that grew in the path of these terrible storms was shorn clean away from its roots. The summits of those columns of sand at length joined, and then burst forth from their united tops a yellow gigantic cloud of sand of such magnitude and density as to darken, as in a total eclipse, the face of the bright afternoon sun. The sand spout, called by the natives "zobahah," shortly after subsided, but the ... [illegible] and wool beside the traveler and the tent that happens to stand in their way. Not more than ten yards from the column the air is perfectly calm, but, within the small circumscribing circle, there rages such a tempest as will carry away anything however firmly fixed in the ground, into the regions of the upper air as easily as an ordinary gust of wind will blow a piece of paper. The camel, this wonderful ship of the desert, always knows a few hours before whether one of those approaching "zobahahs" is likely to come upon him, and his natural instinct will guide him to a place of safety, where he lies down and only breathes the cool reactive current which closely follows the burning, almost suffocating, hot air which accompanies the "zobahahs." The usual movement of these sand spouts is in the arc of a wide circle, and the direction of the center of the circle is almost invariably from south to north.

When these awful turmoils are over, and the disturbing elements have resumed their normal state, the burning sand becomes saturated with a heavy dew, the sun is less angry, and the African desert more amenable to life in both men and beasts. Nature's wisdom and wonders are indeed beyond man's limited understanding.

Peculiar

Peculiar in combination, proportion, and preparation of ingredients, Hood's Sarsaparilla possesses the curative value of the best known remedies of the vegetable kingdom. Peculiar in its strength and economy, Hood's Sarsaparilla is the only medicine of which can truly be said, "One Hundred Doses One Dollar." Peculiar in its medicinal merits, Hood's Sarsaparilla accomplishes cures hitherto unknown, and has won for itself the title of "The greatest blood purifier ever discovered." Peculiar in its "good name at home,"—there is more of Hood's Sarsaparilla sold in Lowell than of all other blood purifiers. Peculiar in its phenomenal record of sales abroad, no other preparation ever attained so rapidly nor held so steadfastly the confidence of all classes of people. Peculiar in the brain-work which it represents, Hood's Sarsaparilla combines all the knowledge which modern research in medical science has developed, with many years practical experience in preparing medicines. SATURDAY, JULY 13, 1889.

The People's Voice will be Heard.

When the public announcement was made that the authorities had notified the saloons of Bangor that they must be closed "during the continuance of the lumbermen's strike" this paper did not publish the statement, as we did not understand how the execution of the laws could be limited to a particular period. But when the authorities proceeded to enforce the laws by making seizures and arrests, and did close the saloons, we commended the action as praiseworthy, and welcomed sobriety to our thoroughfares.

For a time the unlawful traffic in liquor was practically suppressed in this city. It was suppressed by the action of the officers of the law which convinced the saloon-keepers that the selling of liquors would bring upon them seizures and the heavy penalties of the law.

The closing of the saloons even temporarily was by no act of courtesy on the part of the saloon-keepers, and resulted from no willingness to refrain from their traffic even during a brief period of public apprehension of disturbance; for after the notice was given the liquor sellers persisted in carrying on their traffic until numerous places were raided by the police, large quantities of liquor seized and the venders hauled before the court.

Then the saloons closed, because their keepers believed that the attempt to sell liquor would surely bring the police to their doors and land themselves in the police court.

The saloons remained closed while they believed that search, seizure and arrest would surely follow a resumption of unlawful traffic. How or why they became convinced that at a certain time they could open their doors again and set their streams of rum flowing without fear or disturbance, we do not pretend to know.

They know that the law forbids their traffic to-day as imperatively as it did ten days ago, and that the same penalties are denounced against the sale of liquor in Bangor as was the case when the recent seizures were made. Why are they not as fearful of the laws and penalties now, as they were then, when they cowered behind their barred doors and in every way exhibited their wholesome dread of the laws that all are bound to obey?

If sobriety could reign in our community for two happy weeks, why should our city be given over again to the defilement of reeking dram-shops?

These are questions that the thoughtful citizens of Bangor are asking themselves and asking each other with an earnestness that will bear its fruit. The public-spirited professional man, the clear-headed merchant, the intelligent, home-loving mechanic, the sturdy laborer who sees in the liquor shop the deadliest foe of industry—all are thinking of this matter in its relations to themselves, their families and the community in which they live.

The saloons may exult in their fancied strength, but the power of public opinion is mightier than they, and it will find voice through the pulpit, the press and the home, until the laws for the protection of society shall be recognized and obeyed.

"Should be Ashamed of Itself."

A certain Bangor newspaper should be thoroughly ashamed of itself for the course it has taken with regard to the struggle between the law and its violators in that city. It has devotedly arrayed itself on the side of law-breakers—given itself to their cause, body and soul, glorying in their defiance of the statutes of the State, in these words:

"Petitions are in circulation here among the temperance people, calling for the strict enforcement of the liquor law. They are not being very generally signed and we would most respectfully announce to the agitators that in our opinion their time will be wasted. Just now it seems to be quite satisfactory not to rigidly enforce the law."

After such an utterance as that, a newspaper should appear printed in carmine ink for a week. Is our contemporary incapable of blushing?—Lewiston Journal.

As the phrase "a certain Bangor newspaper" is rather indefinite, we would suggest to our Lewiston contemporary that it would have been better to give proper credit to the Bangor Commercial.

"Getting Together."

Representative Randall recently remarked that the duty of the Democrats was to "get together." Just how well they are succeeding in this respect is shown by the Cincinnati Commercial as follows:

Mr. Lawrence T. Neal is for free trade.

Mr. James Campbell voted against the Morrison bill, and for the Mills bill "under protest." He is for protection.

Mr. Samuel J. Randall is for protection.

Mr. Roger Q. Mills is an openly pronounced free trader.

Mr. Henry Watterson looks upon free trade as the "Star-eyed Goddess."

The New York Sun says to the Ohio Democrats:

"No free trade nonsense, if you please."

The Steubenville, (O.) Gazette (Dem.) says:

"Free trade is what the Democratic party believe in."

The Augusta Chronicle is for protection to Southern industries.

The Nashville American was for protection a short time ago, and now is for free trade, or thinks it is.

The New York World is (and here's where the fun comes in) fiercely clubbing Tammany and Plutocracy and Governor Hill.

The Sun is celebrating the greatness of Hill and advocating him for President to succeed Harrison.

The St. Louis Republic is belaboring Hill and using billingsgate appropriately to express its sentiments towards him.

The Sun strikes Cleveland wherever it can hit. Whether above or below the belt makes no difference to the Sun.

The Atlanta Constitution is for Cleveland for next President and also Hill. It is for protection and also free trade, and would like to have the North indicted for rendering the verdict in the McDow case.

Mr. Allen W. Thurman declares that no protection Democrat shall be nominated in Ohio, or if he is he shall be defeated.

Mr. Brice is privately for protection and publicly for free trade.

The Mugwump papers are for Cleveland and free trade.

The Steubenville Gazette says:

"The Atlanta Constitution says that the South does not believe in free trade nor does the Democratic party. The Constitution is hopelessly in the minority as to the party's attitude, and its own candidate, Mr. Cleveland is agin it. Grady will have to surrender his principles or his candidate."

Go on with your "getting together" brethren.

Close the Liquor Saloons.

GOOD TEMPLARS FOR LAW AND ORDER.

MATTAWAMKEAG, July 12, 1889.

To the Editor of the Whig and Courier:

Dear Sir—Permit me to commend the stand taken by THE WHIG on the enforcement of the liquor law. To declare a law to be good and to advocate its enforcement gives strength to the law. To declare a law a failure tends to weaken the law and encourage the law-breakers. The position you have taken will receive the endorsement of every Good Templar in Maine.

J. H. HAMILTON,
Grand Chief Templar of Maine Good Templars.

An Exaggerated Impression.

[Wash. Cor. Boston Traveller.]

The care that has been bestowed upon minor matters of appointments has led to an exaggerated impression that the President is spending his whole time over the allotment of the offices. Important as that part of his work is, and careful as is the attention bestowed upon it, but a small fraction of President Harrison's time has been occupied in that way. Of the thousands of callers at the White House who have seen him since March 4, an overwhelming majority have been here on office-seeking business. The President has undoubtedly listened to them patiently, and with the aid of his Cabinet officers has sifted their claims with due care.

But they have consumed far less of his time than any other callers, Senators, Congressmen, editors, leaders in every department of thought and action who have consulted with him. Probably even a smaller fraction of the errands of these visitors has related to offices than the proportion of the President's time that has been given to that subject. Every portion of the general policy of the administration as represented by the seven great departments of the government, and every current question affecting the welfare of the whole country has been considered at these interviews. Senators and Representatives who called upon the President have been patiently content to have their visits ascribed in the Washington despatches to office-seeking.

The President has shown no signs of impatience at the assumption that he was spending his time over the same subject. But in reality the great bulk of his time and consideration has been given to such diverse and important subjects as the policy of the Treasury Department, Samoan question, Haytian affairs, Indian relations, development of the navy and the needs of the army, the efficiency of the new Agricultural Department, and the opening of Okalahoma and lesser incidents with public lands, the question of calling an extra session of Congress, Civil Service law and the organization and work of the Civil Service Commission, preparations for taking of the census, various questions from the Department of Justice, some of them involving life or death, and a score of other public concerns.

On account of its personal aspect, far more reaches the public about officers and office-seekers than about the consideration of these abstract questions, but it is, nevertheless, a fact that these matters of public policy have from the start received their due share of attention and have not been overshadowed by the mere distribution of spoils of office, important as that is, and successfully as that has been managed.

In the latter part of August the President will go to Bar Harbor as the guest of Secretary Blaine for two weeks. This will be his real vacation, and during that time he will drop all executive business so far as possible.

The Mugwumps are those independent Republicans who think that the result of every political contest should truly represent the deliberately expressed will and power of the people through an honest, pure, unpurchased ballot, and that public office should be a public trust, and not the politician's loot.—Philadelphia Telegraph.

In its eagerness to attract the attention of some one, if only a Mugwump, the Telegraph makes a sad spectacle of itself. This attempt to idealize that peculiar specimen of humanity known as the Mugwump comes at rather a late day. They have written their own history, and instead of the exalted beings pictured above, the professional Mugwumps are known as the most unscrupulous, hide-bound partisans in the country. There is nothing Republican, independent or otherwise, about them. They are Democratic free traders pure and simple and their hypocritical cant about civil service reform is the thinnest kind of a disguise.

Hon. William Walter Phelps, in refusing an invitation from the Phelps Guards to a public reception to be given him in Paterson in honor of his success in the Berlin Conference, wrote: "I don't like to celebrate the results of the Samoan Conference when my colleagues on the Commission are absent. If there is anything to celebrate—and while a diplomatic padlock ties my own lips, I have not failed to read in the English and German press that in their opinion the interests of the United States and of Samoa were not neglected in Berlin—the credit must be shared, at least equally with my accomplished colleagues on the American Commission: Kasson, of Iowa—astute, alert, experienced; trained for a generation in the debates of Congress to readiness of thought and expression; trained in diplomacy, for which he was fitted by nature, at Vienna and Berlin, and rich in the precedents of two International conferences, in which he had years ago a conspicuous part; Bates, of Delaware, young, eager and accomplished, bringing to the very table of the conference a personal and accurate knowledge of Samoan customs, laws and histories; and welcomed there with peculiar respect, because they welcomed him as an enemy, and he proved by his judicial fairness in debate and in decision that a man who most respects his own rights will most regard the rights of others and become their friend; to these were largely due the success of the Conference and I should be loth, by any public celebration in their absence, to indicate that I claimed any more than my share with them of a battle honorably fought."

Save the Babies!

Fresh, Pure Milk a Necessity.

It is a well-understood fact, daily emphasized by our physicians, that the largest proportion of infantile stomach diseases, such as diarrhea, cholera infantum, etc., are due to the use of poor milk, or milk which is not fresh. It is also true that milk left in the morning will not keep fresh and harmless for twenty four hours during hot weather, and that therefore milk to be used by infants should be had fresh twice a day. In order to accommodate customers, I shall, in addition to my usual morning delivery of milk, make a delivery at night to all who will leave their orders.

In Any Quantity,
FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE

The Greatest Invention of the Age. THE DOCKASH GRATE

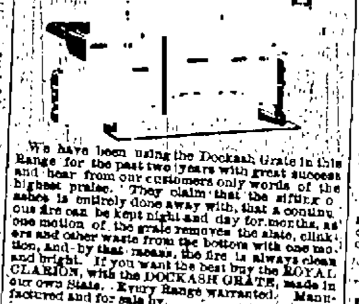

In the Celebrated

Royal Clarion Ranges.

A perfect device for the burning of coal. A saving of from 25 to 50 per cent. in fuel is assured.

Points of Excellence.

Economy in fuel,
Cleanliness of operation,
Quickness of fire,
Perfect combustion,
Simplicity of construction,
Protection against action of heat,
Compactness of form,
Operation by crank.

We have been using the Dockash Grate in this Range for the past two years with great success and hear from our customers only words of the highest praise. They claim that the sifting of ashes is entirely done away with, that a continuous fire can be kept night and day for months, as one motion of the grate removes the slate, clinkers and other waste from the bottom with one motion, and by that means the fire is always clean and bright. If you want the best buy the ROYAL CLARION, with the DOCKASH GRATE, made in our own State. Every Range warranted. Manufactured and for sale by

WOOD, BISHOP & CO.,

Also for sale by JOSEPH SEMPLE, Bangor; SPARKS, WENTWORTH & WOODBURY, Brewer.

GLADYS MAKES TROUBLE.

BUT HER OWNER WAS HAPPY, FOR HE WAS LOSING FLESH.

The Desire for Household Pets Results in a New Invention—The Cat That Was Five Times Buried—The Dog Was Always Jolly When Needing a Thrashing.

Another new method for the reduction of obesity has been discovered, as all great discoveries are brought about, purely by accident.

You see, it was just like this, expounded its inventor. My wife and I went to housekeeping a while ago for the first time, and she thought she couldn't keep house without some pets. You know how it is when your wife makes up her mind to have anything. Well, I got the pets, a cat and a dog.

At that time I was working a rowing machine night and morning, swinging a fifteen pound club, and various things of that kind to keep my flesh down. Well, the first week after the dog came, it kept me so busy effecting reconciliation between her and the cat, teaching her that I didn't enjoy tearing off down the block after her every time the door opened, and curbing her propensity for rearranging rugs and the little curtains and sashes my wife hangs around on tables and chairs, and in bringing things, particularly my wearing apparel, from the back yard, where she had a trick of dragging them, that I didn't have time to use the machine and club at all. At the end of the week I had a whip on every floor, and had lost two pounds of flesh.

After harmony had been established between Gladys and the cat, peace seemed to have been declared on her part with all the feline race. She began to cultivate a gaunt tomcat that came growling into the yard, but Tom didn't reciprocate her friendly approaches. He had known bitter experiences, and his instincts were pessimistic and aggressive. He made a dive at Gladys, who was all unprepared for the onslaught, and, of course, she got the worst of it. In a lull in the proceedings I put a bullet through Tom's back and finished the fray. I intended to hit the cat in the head, but with the usual perversity of his kind, he continued to spring just enough to take it in the back. He crawled up a tree in a sickening and writhing way, kicking out his quivering hind legs, and my wife began to cry and get white, and say she knew she was going to faint. I begged of her not to until I could bury my dead, before the neighbors rushed in, and just then the cat gave one last wiggle and dropped out of the tree. I put my wife on the bed with the Pond's extract bottle, as I couldn't find the cologne, and rushed down to bury the cat under a rose bush. Gladys looked on approvingly, and when the grave was smoothed over she snuffed around it in a satisfied sort of way, which intimated that the interment was all correct and proper.

The next night when I got home that cat lay under the rose bush without a hair on its carcass, and beside it sat Gladys triumphant, radiant and expectant, waiting my commendation. Some of the dirt from that grave was on the parlor windows, some in the pan of lettuce set out on the door step, and a lot more was over the fence in the next yard. Well, I licked the dog as usual, as scientifically and handsomely as I know how, rubbed her nose on the cat, on the spade in the grave, explaining meantime that I wanted the cat left alone. Then I buried it again, Gladys capering about the yard, catching the various fluttering pendant garments on the clothes line in her teeth, and swinging round and round in great glee until the clothes tore or the pins came out.

The next night when I went home my wife was gone. I didn't have to inquire. I know without. A heavy tiger skin rug had been dragged into the next room and turned upside down, with a white silk scarf off the cabinet around the tiger's head. A large fur rug had been dragged away from the fireplace and piled up with a down pillow and a rug of choice skins from the couch; in a corner a Venitian glass ornament lay in fragments on the floor, and in the midst of the devastation, in a white and gold chair so decked out with blue ribbons and plush that neither I or any guest who ever came here had sufficient temerity to sit down in it, sat Gladys, animated, expectant and delighted to see me. I went to the window to get a whip and looked out. There lay the cat, stark, stiff and staring.

It took me a long time to polish that dog off as she deserved and get the cat buried again to my satisfaction, and it was not quite agreeable, even to me, to be rubbing the dog's nose in the corpse in the way she deserved.

The next night, when I got home, I found my wife crying [illegible] bowl and holding [illegible] thing sewed [illegible] under water with her finger. [illegible] to be three of the four kittens which she had asked me to kill, and which I had forgotten. The Lord only knows how long she had been [illegible] out that they wouldn't [illegible] so [illegible] shoes she had attempted to make a meal off of, and to-night it will be something else. Of course, it's a little expensive, but I eat and drink everything I like, and the flesh is melting off of me like magic. Beats all the systems of reduction I ever heard of.—New York Sun.

TEDDIE'S CHASE.

"O mamma, mamma, did you say
I may have the eggs I find today?"
And Ted, with glee,
To the barn ran he,
Where he thought old Toddlekins ought to be.

He hunted high and he hunted low,
Everywhere that a hen could go;
Over the mow,
Behind the plow,
And into the shed of the milley cow.

He moved the barrels and things about;
He emptied the boxes inside out;
He looked in the barrow,
Behind the harrow,
And into the oat bins, dark and narrow.

He searched the crib and the woodpile through,
Then down to the brook where the alders grow;
Along the edge
Of the soft green sedge,
And in cozy nooks of the osage hedge.

And where was Toddlekins all this while?
Well, I really think if a hen could smile,
'Twould be at the race
And fruitless chase
Of Teddie to find her hiding place.

'Twas up in the roof, on a broad old rafter,
And Teddie may take his turn at laughter
When her chickies try
To walk or fly,
For what will they do up there, so high?
—Mrs. J. H. Dana in Youth's Companion.

That Close Shave.

Whenever a man comes into my shop and asks for a clean shave, I wish that I knew him well enough to show him a piece of his skin under a microscope after he has had his shave and is feeling his smooth face in a satisfied way while the boy brushes him off. The hair of the beard, in growing, raises little hills of flesh around each root, and in shaving a man smoothly the razor cuts these off, leaving the blood vessels exposed. Under the microscope these bleeding vessels can be distinctly seen, and the flesh is seen to be entirely without the covering of skin it should have. The natural result is that the close shaver is always troubled with colds and affections of the throat. Close shaving is so much a western habit that eastern barbers say they can tell a western man by his dissatisfied look when he gets out of the chair and feels that he has some of the skin still left on his face.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

That's All that Saves the Poems.

The "elocutionist" has hid his light under a bushel as long as he can. He is now determined to let his light shine, to lift up his voice and spare not and to magnify his office for all it is worth and toot his horn if he doesn't sell a clam. A Chicago elocutionist, discussing in The Voice the elements of a successful recitation, speaks of "other pieces like 'Mother and Poet,' 'The Raven' and like productions of no great literary merit that produce marvelous effects when well rendered." Often wondered what kept those mediocre jingles alive so long, when some of my own finest efforts, worthy to go ringing down the echoing aisles of the copy dummy, stranded on the shingly beach of the cold and sullen W. B. It's the "reading" that has rescued Mrs. Browning and Poe from the insatiate maw of that relentless monster, O. B'Livion, Sr.—Robert J. Burdette.

Anxious to Get the News.

Don't forget the editor when you have a news item. If your wife whips you, let us know of it and we will set you right before the public. If you have company tell us—if you are not ashamed of your visitors. If a youngster arrives at your house and demands food and raiment, buy a quarter's worth of cigars and come around, and if you are a cash subscriber we will furnish a name for him or her, as circumstances warrant. If you have a social gathering of a few friends bring around a big cake, six or seven pies and a ham—not necessarily to eat, but, as a guarantee of good faith. You needn't bother to invite us as it may be a little too cool for our wardrobe. We mention these little things because we want the news, and we will have it. —Mifflinburg Times.

He Kissed Me.

A Nebraska paper narrates this educational incident: A high school girl, class A, being told by her teacher to parse the sentence, "He kissed me," consented reluctantly, because opposed to speaking of private affairs in public. "He," she commenced, with unnecessary emphasis and a fond lingering over the word that brought crimson to her cheeks, "is a pronoun; third person, singular number, masculine gender; a gentleman, pretty well fixed; universally considered a good catch. Kissed is a verb, transitive—too much so; regular—every evening; indicative mood—indicating affection; first and third person, plural number and governed by circumstances. Me—oh, everybody knows me," and down she went.

The Future of Electricity.

It would be quite impossible to forecast the future, even for a single decade, with reference to the applications of electricity, even though discovery were ended. The mere expansion of industries already in some degree established will give them an importance which we cannot now estimate. But discovery is not ended, and it is more than probable that results will yet be reached which, although they cannot be at variance with the general doctrine of energy as now understood, may to some extent revolutionise our methods, with corresponding advantages.—Professor C. F. Brackett in Scribner's.

CHINESE PRESCRIPTIONS.

Some of the Horrible Doses the Doctors Mix for Their Patients.

The New York Chinese doctors are beginning to lose their hold upon their heretofore devoted clients. This has been accomplished by simple but solid American medical genius. It has been the custom ever since the Chinese colony began to "put on airs" in New York for sick Chinamen from all parts of the country this side of the Rocky mountains to come to Gotham, to consult with their big medicine men, of whom there are over a dozen who have their fantastic shingles hung up in Mott street upon the doors of their domiciles. Besides this, they give a bigger prescription and heavier doses than their American competitors. These Chinese physicians will devote from two to six hours to feeling your pulse, and all for the munificent sum of from a quarter to a fifty cent piece.

Imagine a man who, having taken a big dose of opium with the avowed purpose of having his carcass housed in Evergreen cemetery as early as possible, so that his bones may be ready for speedy shipment to China, having a doctor with big round eye glasses sit down to feel the poor fellow's pulse for two hours and a half, and then give him the following prescription to be boiled into a soup and then drunk:

Pickled lizards, two pairs, 4 males and 4 females; Corea ginseng root, ½ an ounce; willow cricket skins, half a dozen, 3 males and 3 females; sweet potato vines, 1 ounce; white nuts, 1 ounce; lotus leaves, ¼ an ounce; rattlesnake tail, ¼ of an ounce; black dates, 2 ounces; elm bark, ¾ an ounce; devil fish toes, ½ an ounce; reindeer's horn, ½ an ounce; birds' claws, ¼ of an ounce; dried ginger, ¼ of an ounce; coffin nails (old ones), ½ an ounce. Boil the whole with 2 quarts of water until only half of the water is left, and then drink it as a preliminary dose.

Such was the prescription given on last Friday afternoon to a poor laundryman on the corner of Broome and Delancy streets by a Chinese doctor, who said his office was at 18 Mott street. But, fortunately for the patient, before the famous prescription was put up by a Chinese druggist on Mott street, his friend, Ah Sing, rushed to an American doctor near Chinatown. The latter went to the dying man and restored him to consciousness before the deadly messenger got back.

Here is another prescription given to Wong Ah Sing, of 5 Mott street, some time ago, for a cancer, which the doctor and his colleagues had been trying to cure for the past four years. But they didn't cure it. At last the poor fellow was nearly dead, and the doctors at the New York hospital got hold of the patient and cured him in less than three weeks.

This is the prescription for the cure of cancer, translated from the original:

Raw earth, 6 ounces; winter wheat, 6 ounces; ginseng pills 3; sprig of cinnamon, 1½ ounces; southern apricot seeds, 1 ounce; willow leaves, ¾ ounce; aniseseed oil, 1 ounce; red dog's tail, 1 ounce; peach skin, 2 ounce; clam shell, 2 ounces; sandal wood, 5 ounces, dandelion, dried, 1 ounce. Mix and boil with water; take it seven times a day. Dr. Cho Poo.

Of the dozen or more sick Chinamen who have recently been drugged nearly to death by such wonderful compounds many have been subsequently cured by American physicians when they had been given up as hopeless by their own physician. These examples of their own doctors' inefficiency is the principal cause of their recent downfall.—Wong Chin Foo in New York World.

Grass That Is Not Green.

It may be noted that the one defect of the Riviera is that it is not green. A few of our forest trees would make the landscape perhaps too perfect. The olives which clothe the hills are gray. The grass is scanty and ill grown. When a millionaire would indulge in the luxury of a lawn he has to resow it every year; from which the reader accustomed to immemorial turf, which has lived through as many generations as would suffice to confirm the nobility of a family, will understand what grass is in these regions. But our Frenchman was none the less sure. "Sir," said an American, afterwards, "there is no grass in the world like English grass, except at Newport; there is beautiful grass at Newport." And we bethought us, to soothe our feelings, of Mr. John Burroughs, the American naturalist, who declares that if we would but refrain from washing for a little while, such is the soft and dewy character of our climate, a greenness would grow all over us—a turfy deposit upon our hands, a gentle veil of mosses upon our uncovered brows. Such are the differing opinions of other nations.—Blackwood's Magazine.

APPRAISING DIAMONDS.

The Scales Used Are So Accurate That They Will Weigh a Hair.

The arrangements for such an examination are quite elaborate. First of all the scales are tested. These are marvels of accuracy and will readily weigh a hair. An eyebrow dropped on the balance will send the other side of the scale slowly upward. These scales are placed upon a broad table leveled by a careful calculation; around which stand the appraiser, his assistants, the experts and the importers. They do not talk, because a tremor of the scales and consequent inaccurate weighing might result from loud articulation. After the doors have been closed several innocent looking wooden boxes are placed on the table and unsealed. Two or three boxes of the size that bonbons come in may contain $500,000 worth of sparkling diamonds. The stones are wrapped up in pockets of paper like druggists' powders. These pockets are unfastened and laid on the table. The invoice is consulted and the government expert makes his inspection and calculations in the presence of all parties. His judgment is final and there is no appeal from his decisions.

If he thinks a diamond is worth $100 a carat, and the importer has it invoiced half that sum, up goes the invoice to the expert's figure. It is in the valuation of the larger stones that the finest discriminating powers are required and the most thorough knowledge of diamonds necessary. [illegible] that are absolutely undiscoverable [illegible] the naked eye, but which affect [illegible] of the stones, according to [illegible] quality, are discovered by [illegible] of the magnifying glass, which [illegible] indispensable to the expert. ments. The precious stones are shipped from the principal European diamond centers in wooden boxes about six inches long and half that depth and width. Nothing appears more careless, but in reality this method is the safest that could be adopted. None but the shrewdest thief would suspect that an ordinary wooden box, handled like any piece of express matter, contained a fortune in diamonds. It is rarely that they go astray, and the European agent of a big importing house can ship his purchase directly from the diamond centers in plain boxes, subject to regular express rates, with no fear as to their safe arrival.—New York Star.

Irregular.

The little steamboats which run on the Florida rivers are reported to have a very elastic schedule of time to run upon. The habits of the easy going people are no doubt to be credited with the uncertain movements of the craft. A writer from that state says that no one seems to know exactly when the boat will arrive or depart, and, moreover, no one seems to care or to think that it matters at all.

"If she does not come today she will to-morrow," is the prevalent tone of answer to inquiries. "She'll be along about 5 o'clock." "No, she won't; she'll not come till 9 or 10." "She'll run down to Melbourne next trip." "No, she won't; she'll stop here," and so forth, say our various sources of information.

There is a tiny little steamer, which is announced and intended to run to the southern end of the river, and which looks like a coffee pot as it comes puffing fussily along, when we see it at last. For some days we do not see it; and further, no one seems to know exactly where the little craft is.

"Say, have you seen the Haul-over?"

"Well, the Diana, she saw her the day before yesterday up river."

"She went up this morning."

"Why, she went down yesterday."

Says one, in compassionate tones: "The poor thing's took sick and stopped for a little rest. Laid up for repairs at the blacksmith's." This last surmise turns out to be the correct one.—Youth's Companion.

All About Laughter.

It has been observed that laughter is indicative of particular temper and character, according to the sound of the vowel that prevails in cachinnation. Persons that laugh in a broad Latin "A" are open hearted, honest people, fond of noisy jocundity, but perhaps of voluble mood. Excessive jerking laughter, however, is an evidence of vulgarity. Those laughing in a dry "A" are respectable, but little expansive, and a hard lot of people. When the Latin "E" prevails, there prevails also a phlegmatic, melancholy temper. Timorous, unsteady people, also those imbued with malignity, laugh in a kind of swelling "I." Laughter in "O" is the utterance of proud, bold, imperative, somewhat bantering people. Beware of those that in "oo" (o). They are traitors, haters, scorners.—Boston Budget.

An Untimely Gesture.

The following is extracted from an address by the bishop of Peterborough (Dr. Magee), to a class of candidates for ordination:

"Most of you," he said, "will do well to avoid action in the pulpit. I shall never forget a raw boned curate I once had, with hands like legs of mutton. I can see him still preparing for a grand peroration, and leaning over the pulpit with outstretched dependent palms, as he exclaimed: 'Paws, me brethren, paws!'" —London Exchange.

Catarrh of the Stomach.

The complaint from which Mr. Larsen suffered, catarrh of the stomach, is generally known to the sufferer as "dyspepsia." Among the symptoms may be noted a dull, heavy pain or oppression in the stomach shortly after eating, accompanied by the formation of gas and a belching of wind. Usually the stomach becomes tender or painful and frequently feels cold, as if there was a lump of ice held against it or in it. The breath often is offensive, and there is an ugly, bitter, slimy taste in the mouth, especially in the morning. The patient often has headache, and is troubled with vertigo or a feeling of lightheadedness or dizziness; also may have palpitation or fluttering of the heart, and frequently suffers much from constipation. There is a constant feeling of languor, dullness and heaviness, of oppression and exhaustion, great depression of spirits, a disinclination for all exertion, and a general bad, wretched feeling.

In some cases the skin becomes hot and dry, particularly the feet and hands; in others, again, the feet and hands are cold, and there is a great heat in the body and head. Sometimes there are sharp pains, front and back, under the shoulders, and there may be chronic diarrhea. The tongue is usually coated, and often there is nausea and vomiting after meals.

The appetite is variable, generally poor, and there is often an excessive flow of saliva. The patient suffers from an increased fever during the night, frequently perspires while asleep and is troubled with heartburn. Generally the face is flushed or the skin becomes sallow, and sometimes there is a dry, hacking cough, while the voice is hoarse and husky.—Boston Globe.

The Cocoanut Crab.

On the Agala Islands, in the Indian ocean, there is a very strange crab. He is known to science as the Birgus latro, or thief crab, and his depredations are carried on in the cocoanut groves which abound on these islands. This crab grows to be twenty-two inches long, measuring from the tip of the tail to the end of the long claw, and resembles in general appearance the hermit crab. The abdomen is fleshy, and not covered with a shell, and in order to protect this it is the habit of the thief crab to take forcible possession of a shell of the Trochus family, in which it lives. It is nocturnal in its operations, and has the faculty of selecting the trees having the finest cocoanuts upon them.

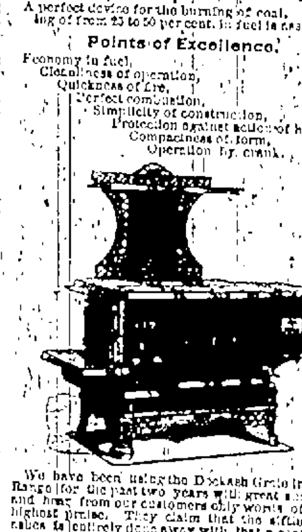

Climbing up the trunks frequently for twenty-five feet, it reaches the limbs and severs the stems which attach the nuts to the branches. These are frequently as thick as your three fingers, and would require a strong knife. Having brought down the nut, the crab now descends to the ground, digs a hole and rolls the cocoanut into it.

He then commences to tear off the husk, fiber by fiber, until the nut is completely exposed, and then, breaking in what is known as the eye he eats the meat completely out. The fiber [illegible] off the [illegible]

The Princess's Clothing.

A PEEP AT A ROYAL TROUSSEAU.

[St. Petersburg Letter to the Pall Mall Gazette.]

Visions of filmy laces, silks, embroideries, ribbons, satines, furs and plushes rise now before my eyes after an inspection of the trousseau of the Princess Royal of Greece, the wedding present of the Empress of Russia to her niece.

Two of the salons of the Winter Palace were required to hold it, which is nothing, however, to be wondered at when one remembers it has cost over 300,000 roubles, about 30,000 pounds of English money.

In the first salon—which happened to be the famous White salon of the Palace—were arranged all round the enormous trunks bound in red morocco leather with handsome brass mountings, a Royal present in themselves, which were to hold the trousseau, and under a white linen covering on a side table were piled the dainty pillows to be used by her Royal Highness. These were all sizes and shapes, from the wide full-length pillow to the charming little ghost of a pillow about the size of one's hand, which Russian ladies find it impossible to sleep without, and which rest just under the ear, reaching to about the middle of the cheek. They were of elderdown, softer than anything I have felt before, and were enclosed in a case of the finest Chinese silk, of a perfectly delicious shell-pink color—a color to make one dream of ethereal clouds and the dawn.

Opposite these, on another table, in a long, wadded, satin-lined box of rosewood, were the furs—a circular cloak of magnificent black sable, faced with rich ruby velvet; a boa of the same, which ever on when tied must reach to the toes of Her Royal Highness, and a dainty muff.

Beside these were the travelling dressing-cases of silver, one holding all the dozen of trifles necessary for a lady's toilet, with a handsome oval-shaped mirror reposing on the blue velvet lining, and with a drawer underneath, which when opened, disclosed a toilet-basin and jug, with numerous little soap dishes, all of silver; the second case containing the silver spirit lamp for heating water, a tea and coffee pot, and hot-water jug, all, too, of silver.

In the second room, the famous Golden Salon where the Empress holds her receptions, were all the gowns, dresses, shoes, fans, underclothing, cloaks and mantles of all descriptions.

The first gown we looked at was, of course, the all-important wedding one. It was simply dazzling. It was being made, of course, after the style of all Russian Court gowns, the entire train, several yards long, being of a wonderful cloth of silver manufactured at Moscow, and worked all over in silver also with a magnificent highly raised embroidery. It was cut low at the neck, with wide, long sleeves to the wrist, where they were narrowed, and fastened, being open, however, from the shoulder to display the inside of the arm, the only relief to all this magnificence being a tiny ruching of white swansdown all around the sleeves from the shoulders and around the bodice.

Another Court gown quite on the same pattern was of Royal blue velvet, and with the same wonderful embroidery, only of gold roses and trails of leaves and buds, being heavily raised all over the entire velvet train and bodice.

Among the evening gowns was one specially beautiful from Worth—a pale salmon pink silk and tulle, with a wonderful arrangement of asters of the same hue and green leaves. One was quite bewildered, in fact, over the gowns, for they were of all hues and styles, the laces being especially handsome. A deep salmon pink with heavy ruchings of silk frayed at the edges was very beautiful. So was another pink, with exquisite tulle trimmings and pearl embroidery, and still another pink of rich sheeny satin, made severely plain in the front, with a baby bodice and wide sash of the same material as the dress, was quite lovely.

Then there were blue silks and satins of all shades, whites which were variously embroidered in gold, silver and pearl, a gray silk with pretty pink bows; some greens in all shades, and a heavy grosgrain silk in dull brick red, with handsome trimmings of jet. Browns and creams are the only two colors we missed. Among the unmade gowns were black brocaded silk and tulles, spangled, with tiny dots in silver and gold.

The opera cloaks and wraps were all of them perfectly superb. Some were of plush, others of silk, but all trimmed with handsome embroideries and long fringes. One rich white silk was almost covered with exquisite embroidery in gold, another in heliotrope, and a soft pearl gray plush was covered with a wonderful Persian design in gray, red, and blue silk, something like the incomprehensible idea you see in Paisley shawls; one small mantle in pale heliotrope silk with handsome lace trimmings, being delicious in its daintiness. All of the mantles had jewelled clasps, the clasp for the fur cloak being gold heavily studded with diamonds.

On one long rack reaching the entire length of the salon were arranged the petticoats. We noticed two only of flannel; one a white one being trimmed with two flounces of lace, and the other a red one, embroidered after a Russian design in Royal blue silk. Then there were white silk and satin petticoats, without end; delicious petticoats in lawn, some covered with lace and ribbons, others with flounces and frills of beautiful Valenceinnes lace and the finest possible pleats and tucks, while other petticoats were of rich pale silks and satins, one beautiful one being of a beautiful crimson with coffee colored lace.

The morning gowns alone were a sight in themselves, some of the white lawn ones being perfectly delightful. One very handsome gown was of pale rose pink plush, with broad moire ribbons and Brussels lace, and an unusually long train of plush edged with lace. Another lovely one was of rich blue silk, and still another of white foulard, with dainty sprays of pale pink rosebuds stamped upon it.

The Princess herself supplies the bonnets and hats, so these were not on view; but on two tables running along two sides of the salon were arranged quantities of beautiful undergarments all of which are of Russian manufacture. These simply pass description, the mere initials being so beautifully embroidered as to be a work of art in themselves. They were all made of the finest lawn, and heavily trimmed with lovely Valenciennes—in fact, nothing could be more beautiful or more dainty, and of everything there were a dozen dozen, even to the dressing jackets, all being ornamented with beautiful insertions of the lace and dainty butterfly knots of various colored ribbons. Close by were exquisite baskets lined with pale satin and laces, always Valenciennes, to hold these pretty garments.

A large square table alone was required to hold the almost endless varieties of dainty silk stockings; these were of all hues and patterns, some extra beautiful ones being embroidered in gold, others in silver, others in pearl, while some pairs had beautiful insertions of lace worked in every the lastep.

On another table were placed shoes and gloves, both being in endless profusion and variety; but among all the dainty satins and kids of all forms I noticed some pairs of strong high boots, with two soles together, quite an inch thick, made on the pattern of those the Empress herself always wears at Gatschina or Peterhoff, or any other of the summer palaces, for walking.

The gloves were of all lengths, and principally kid, many of the shorter ones being of a rich, deep tan color, ... were ...

The fans and handkerchiefs, too, were all most lovely; in some long boxes close by these tied with white satin ribbons were laid corsets, the one we chanced to open being of white satin, heavily trimmed with Valenciennes lace.

Just as we were leaving one of the gorgeous Court lackeys stepped up and said in a tone of dignified reproof:

"But you have not yet seen the robe de chambre of His Royal Highness, the Grand Duke."

We were rather puzzled to account for this article of ... in the ... the bride ... back and followed ... who ... a long ... [illegible]

SLAVE TRADE IN AFRICA

A BRUTAL BUSINESS THAT SEEMS TO BE ON THE INCREASE.

The Atrocities of a Slave March Depicted with Painful Distinctness—The Flag of a Great Republic Put to a Base and Degrading Use.

No one who understands how human life is estimated by savage peoples will doubt the shocking and revolting accounts of travelers regarding this phase of the traffic; and no one who knows what an Arab's heart is made of will make any discount even for the exaggeration of an orator, as he listens to the following citation from a speech delivered in London by Cardinal Lavigerie:

MAN'S INHUMANITY.

"The men who appear the strongest, and whose escape is to be feared, have their hands tied, and sometimes their feet, in such fashion that walking becomes a torture to them; and on their necks are placed yokes which attach several of them together. They march all day; at night, when they stop to rest, a few handfuls of raw 'sorgho' are distributed among the captives. This is all their food. Next morning they must start again. But after the first day or two the fatigue, the sufferings and the privations have weakened a great many. The women and the aged are the first to halt. Then, in order to strike terror into this miserable mass of human beings, their conductors, armed with a wooden bar to economize powder, approach those who appear to be the most exhausted and deal them a terrible blow on the nape of the neck. The unfortunate victims utter a cry, and fall to the ground in the convulsions of death. The terrified troop immediately resumes its march. Terror has imbued even the weakest with new strength.

"Each time some one breaks down the same horrible scene is repeated. At night, on arriving at their halting place, after the first days of such a life, a not less frightful scene awaits them. The traffickers in human flesh have acquired by experience a knowledge of how much their victims can endure. A glance shows them those who will soon sink from weariness; then, to economize the scanty food which they distribute, they pass behind these wretched beings and fell them with a single blow. Their corpses remain where they fall, when they are not suspended on the branches of the neighboring trees; and it is close to them that their companions are obliged to eat and sleep. But what sleep! it may be easily imagined."

SLAVERY ON THE INCREASE.

It is enough. Our hearts are sick with slaughter. Let the witnesses stand down! In the smoke of this torment to go up for ever and ever? Remember that these deeds of blood and darkness are no isolated facts, no temporary misfortunes, no mere passing accidents of the savage state. They are samples of a sustained, accepted and carefully organized system of cruelty and murder which pervades and penetrates every corner of this continent. Do not let it be supposed that this horror is over, that this day of tribulation is at an end. This horror and this day are now. It is not even abating. Slavery is on the increase. Time, civilization, Christianity are not really touching it. No fact in relation to the slave trade is more appalling than this.

The fact of this increase, for a time denied, then doubted, has at last been reluctantly admitted, even by the government of England. In a government blue book her majesty's consul for the Somali coast reports that "the slave trade has been very active of late. On the 16th of Sept. (1888), Capt. Gissing captured three dhows and brought two hundred and four slaves to Aden." The consul at Zanzibar writes (September, 1888) to the Marquis of Salisbury: "There is a marked increase in the slave traffic carried on under the protection of the French flag." The consul further states that dhows carrying French colors were constantly and regularly leaving for the Comoro Islands, Mayotta and Madagascar, loaded with slaves. In June, 1888, Brig. Gen. Hogg, dating from the Aden residency, wrote to the Bombay government: "I have the honor to bring to the notice of government that I have from time to time received reports of the activity of the slave trade from the neighborhood of the Gulf of Tajourra, and I deem it my duty to inform government of this fact with a view to such action being taken as may be deemed advisable."—From "Slavery in Africa," by Professor Henry Drummond in Scribner's.

Highest Mountain.

The highest mountain on the globe is not, as is generally supposed, Mount Everest, that honor belonging to a lofty peak on the Isle of Papua, or New Guinea. This monster, which lifts its snow capped summit far into the clouds, was discovered by Capt. A. J. Lawson, of London, in 1881. According to Lawson this new claimant for the championship is 32,763 feet in height, being 3,781 feet higher than Mount Everest, which is only 29,002 feet above the level of the Indian ocean. This New Guinea giant has been named Mount Hercules.

Of oceans the Pacific is the largest, being 11,000 miles long and 8,000 miles wide. It also claims the honor of being the deepest. The deepest place yet measured was near the Ladrone Islands, where a depth of 4,475 fathoms was found. This great depth may be better understood when we consider that 4,475 fathoms is 26,850 feet, or something over five miles.—St. Louis Republic.

Turtle Over 80 Years Old.

H. A. Andrews, of this city, has in his possession a box turtle, commonly called land turtle, which was marked with his initials in 1866. His turtleship was marked in 1809 by Ellis B. Hall, of Raynham, who died over twenty years ago. This turtle is over 80 years old, and probably 100, as they have been known to exist that long. He was found in Raynham and journeyed to Brockton by express.—Brockton Enterprise.

Buenos Ayres.

On entering Buenos Ayres from the pier one can hardly realize that it is the chief city of South America and one of the most flourishing places in the world. The streets are narrow and badly paved, holes several feet deep being not uncommon, and the houses are mostly only ground floor; some have one upper story, but very few have two. However, it improves on nearer acquaintance. The streets, though not wide, are straight and uniform, and far better than those of Seville, Cadiz and a great many other important European cities, and between the shanties which still exist in many of the principal streets are edifices which would not disgrace the best parts of London or Paris. Indeed, several well known English and French firms have branch establishments here, quite equal in style to their head offices. Buenos Ayres is the most European looking city of South America, yet it is far from being English in appearance. I should rather describe it as "Mediterranean," though it would be difficult to say whether it is more Spanish, Provençal, or Italian.

sauerkraut and snails. Every nation's tastes are consulted. The Marseillaise can get bouillabaisse, the Neapolitan ravioli and macaroni, made and cooked by his fellow countryman, and an Englishman has a better chance of a good cut of roast beef than he would have in many European towns.—London Globe.

Plenty of Coal.

In reply to the assertion that the world in the future may be dependent upon America for its supply of coal, a foreign exchange cites the numerous undrained coal fields of the Netherlands, Switzerland, Sweden, Denmark, Germany, Bohemia, Servia and Hanover, which are estimated at 59,000 square miles, and Russia with 23,000 square miles. The island of Formosa can show 10,000 square miles. Near Peking coal veins of ninety-five feet thickness are to be found. Large coal fields are also found in Austria, Spain, Portugal, Italy, Greece, Turkey and Persia, with 89,000 square miles, to which India's 35,000 and China, with about 400,000 square miles, are still to be added. Japan can furnish 6,000 square miles. There still remain the Falkland Islands, Patagonia and Peru, which contain rich coal deposits. The largest portion of southern Chili is an immense coal bed. Brazil contains coal beds of seventeen to twenty-five feet thickness. In the United States of Colombia a soft chalky coal of good quality is found. Mexico, Vancouver's Island and New South Wales all have coal; the latter country has 25,000 square miles. In addition thereto, Queensland, Victoria and West Australia add upward of 14,000 square miles of coal. New Zealand furnishes 70,000, besides Tasmania, New Caledonia, Natal, Alaska and other partially developed portions of the world, which should represent at least 100,000 square miles, in addition to former figures. The coal fields are in the main but partially explored, and known only to the geologists. The coal fields of North America (excepting Alaska and Mexico) are as little considered in the foregoing statement as are those of Africa.—Oil City Derrick.

A Human Fly.

One of the prominent figures in Westerly, R. I., is "Steeple Jack," by which name William Wallace, the chimney repairer, is known. "Steeple Jack's" method of working on a chimney is novel and interesting and he always has large audiences. He is never out of work. He sets up his own peculiar device for a staging, which is a feature of his profession and which enables him to complete a job in about the time that it takes to erect an ordinary staging. "Steeple Jack" first places a long, light ladder against the chimney that is to be operated on. Then, mounting it, he drives a peculiarly shaped iron pin into the brick work and binds the top of the ladder fast to this pin. Standing on the top round of this ladder, he drives another pin into the chimney as high above his head as he can reach. A rope is then passed over this pin and made fast to a round in a second ladder about three feet from its bottom round. This ladder is then hoisted up until it rests on the top of the first ladder. It is then made fast to the lower pin, and then "Steeple Jack" mounts to the top of it and, driving in another pin, secures the top round to that. From this ladder a third is hoisted, as before, and Jack and the ladders, as many of them as be necessary, continue to rise as far as may be desired. It is estimated that he has clambered about fifteen miles up into the air in this way.—Philadelphia Times.

A Change of Weapon.

Last winter I climbed Lookout Mountain in company with a veteran of the late war. It was his first visit since the day of the memorable assault, and as we climbed he fought the battle over again for my benefit. As the conflict waxed hotter he grew excited, and on our arrival at the hotel near the summit was at fever heat. We then passed on through the narrow defile which leads to the pinnacle, where we were confronted by a diminutive specimen of the genus "cracker" with these words: "If you gentlemen wish to go to the top you must pay twenty-five cents." This was too much for the pent up feelings of my warlike companion who, tragically waving his strong right arm, shouted: "I won't pay it. Twenty-five years ago I came up here with a sword in my hand." But the modern Leonidas, moving not otherwise than to display a deputy sheriff's badge, quietly remarked: "Well, sah, you must come up with a quarter today." The money was paid.—C. C. Teale in Harper's Magazine.

A Postal Box.

A patent postal pillar box of an ingenious character has been exhibited at the Athenaeum club, Melbourne. The box is octagonal in shape and stands seven feet in height, having a diameter of about two feet, and it has three divisions. The top one contains a series of compartments, in which there are police and fire alarms, the former being communicated with by means of a telephone, while the fire brigade is apprised of an outbreak of fire in the locality by the pressure of an electric button. The central division, which is the largest, is devoted to the reception of letters and newspapers, the ordinary slot or opening through which the letters are placed being covered with a wire comb, to prevent the letters being extracted by the insertion of thin sticks or pieces of wire.

The letters fall into an iron box which is fastened on to the door, and when it is desired to clear the box all that the postman has to do is to touch a spring, which causes the bottom of the box to fall, and this allows the letters to drop into the open bag underneath. There is a dial immediately above the door denoting the times at which the box is cleared, and on the door being closed the hand on the dial indicates at what time the next clearance will take place. The bottom division is reserved for the batteries used in connection with the police telephone, fire alarms, and on top of the roof an electric lamp is affixed.—Sydney Herald.

WITH THE SPRING SEASON

Comes the necessary house furnishing, at once the pain and pleasure of every good housekeeper, and in many cases the inevitable replacement of old furniture with new. In view of those facts we call attention to our large assortment of cheap, medium and fine furniture. Our stock is large and the variety offered in styles and materials is so wide that we think we can scarcely fail of satisfying every intending purchaser. In respect to quality, we would say that we desire to be known for cheapness, but we handle no cheap goods; that is to say, we give even in low price grades the very best article the market affords for the money. Our steady aim is to satisfy buyers not only by alluring bargains, but by the satisfaction that comes in goods that wear and stand the test of actual use.

THE KING OF MEDICINE—THE GREAT AMERICAN CANCER CURE.

Cancer is the cumulation in the blood of all the deadly elements known to humanity. Its malignancy is unquestioned. By the old school of physicians it is called a malignant tumor and they prescribe only the knife for its cure. Never recommend anything for the blood from which the tumor originates. Hence, soon after the operation it re-appears in a more malignant form and the poor sufferer soon succumbs to the inevitable. Well may it be called the King of Diseases, as death itself is called the King of Terrors. So any medicine acting through the blood that can cure such a disease ought to be called the King of Medicines, and if it can cure the King of Diseases it ought certainly to cure all lesser blood diseases such as diseases of the Skin, Carbuncles, Tumors, Runners, Moles, Warts, etc., also Enlarged Liver, Spleen, Kidneys, Prostate Glands, etc. It will give tone to the heart quicker than any medicine known by giving pure blood for that organ to act upon. It will give sound, natural sleep, to those who are restless, nervous and wakeful, by giving healthy blood to feed the brain. It is the most perfect blood medicine known. It prepares the blood to heal all old sores, all irritated surfaces such as Catarrh, Bronchitis, Irritable Bladder, Weakness of Bowels, Piles, etc. It will kill Scrofula Humor, like pouring water on to fire, therefore Tubercular Consumption has a formidable opponent here.

LETTER CARRIERS.

All letters are delivered free by carriers when addressed to street and number. People should inform their correspondents of above and have their letters addressed accordingly.

Persons leaving their address at the General Delivery can also have their letters sent, but it is much more convenient to have the street and number on, and they will be delivered earlier than if the same is put on at the office. Carriers make two deliveries daily, the first trip supplying the extremes of their routes.

Collections are made morning, noon and evening in season for important mails.

Carrier's Window open from 7 to 8 P. M., Sundays excepted.

Holidays the Carrier's Window will be open for the delivery of letters from 8 to 9 A. M., and from 7 to 8 P. M. Sundays from 8 to 9 A. M.

Any irregularities in the Carrier's department should be reported to the office.

IMMEDIATE DELIVERY.

Messenger boys are constantly in attendance to deliver letters with immediate delivery stamps, on arrival of all mails, and for local letters from 7 A. M. to 8 P. M., at which hour the office is closed. Persons depositing such letters will please pass them into the general delivery.

Letters arriving from West Sunday morning are delivered on arrival.

ENVELOPES.

No additional charge will be made for printing the name and request to return, across the left hand upper corner of the envelopes furnished by the Post Office Department, (samples of which may be seen at the Cashier's window) when ordered in lots of not less than 500.

A request for the return of a letter to the writer if not claimed within thirty days or less, written or printed, with the writer's name, post office and State, across the left end of the envelope, on the face side, will be complied with.

The public are earnestly recommended to procure Stamped Envelopes with printed return request, as the expense is less, and letters thus enclosed, if not delivered to the person addressed, are returned to the writer free of charge.

First class envelopes of above furnished at $21.00 and $22.00 per thousand.

Stamps cut from Stamped Envelopes cannot be used to prepay postage. The use of such stamps is punishable by a fine of fifty dollars. Stamped Envelopes, spoiled in directing, are redeemed at this office.

STRIKERS IN FULL CHARGE.

A Mob of 3,000 at Homestead Steel Works.

The Men Desperate and Affairs Looking Ugly.

PITTSBURG, July 12 The strikers at Carnegie's steel plant have had full charge of the town of Homestead since noon to-day, and no one dares interfere. The deputies were surrounded by a mob of 3,000 and their badges and clothes almost torn from their bodies. A riot was only prevented by the deputies offering no resistance. To-night the strikers are patrolling the streets and every stranger is compelled to give a good account of himself or leave town. The Pinkerton men have not arrived and the strikers are watching for them. When they reach the scene interesting times are expected. A part of fifty seven non union men from Philadelphia, New York and Boston are at Greenburg, and will leave for Homestead in the morning. The sheriff will go to the scene early to-morrow with a posse of 500 and says he will increase it to 2,000 if necessary. The men are desperate and affairs have an ugly aspect.

"HUNGER IS THE BEST SAUCE"

As a rule, a person who has a good appetite has good health. But how many there are who enjoy nothing, they eat and sit down to meals only as unpleasant duty. Nature's antidotes for this condition are so happily combined in Hood's Sarsaparilla that it soon restores good digestion, creates an appetite and renovates and vitalizes the blood so that the beneficial effect of good food is imparted to the whole body. Truly hunger is the best sauce and Hood's Sarsaparilla induces hunger

A neat folder has been issued by the Bangor and Bar Harbor Steamboat Company, giving the summer arrangement of the steamers upon the line. It shows that the steamers leave this city each morning after the arrival of the trains and touch at all the landings. The steamer Henry Morrison does not touch at Sedgwick or Bass Harbor and the Cimbria does not touch at Sargentville or North East Harbor. Connections are made with the steamer Fleeta at Castine every trip to and from Belfast and at Sedgwick with Dorrity's stage for Bluehill and Brooklin

WOLFERT WEBBER

By WASHINGTON IRVING.

Wolfert found him at his cabin, which was not much larger than a tolerable dog house. It was rudely constructed of fragments of wrecks and drift wood and built on the rocky shore at the foot of the old fort, just about what at present forms the point of the Battery. A "most ancient and fish like smell" pervaded the place. Oars, paddles and fishing rods were leaning against the wall of the fort, a net was spread on the sands to dry; a skiff was drawn up on the beach, and at the door of his cabin lay Mud Sam himself, indulging in a true negro's luxury—sleeping in the sunshine.

Many years had passed away since the time of Sam's youthful adventure, and the snows of many a winter had grizzled the knotty wool upon his head. He perfectly recollected the circumstances, however, for he had often been called upon to relate them, though in his version of the story he differed, in many points from Peechy Prauw; as is not unfrequently the case with authentic historians. As to the subsequent researches of money diggers, Sam knew nothing about them; they were matters quite out of his line; neither did the cautious Wolfert care to disturb his thoughts on that point. His only wish was to secure the old fisherman as a pilot to the spot, and this was readily effected. The long time that had intervened since his nocturnal adventure had effaced all Sam's awe of the place, and the promise of a trifling reward roused him at once from his sleep and his sunshine.

The tide was adverse to making the expedition by water, and Wolfert was too impatient to get to the land of promise, to wait for its turning; they set off, therefore, by land. A walk of four or five miles brought them to the edge of a wood, which at that time covered the greater part of the eastern side of the island. It was just beyond the pleasant region of Bloemen-dael. Here they struck into a long lane, straggling among trees and bushes, very much overgrown with weeds and mullein stalks as if but seldom used, and so completely overshadowed as to enjoy but a kind of twilight. Wild vines entangled the trees and flaunted in their faces; brambles and briars caught their clothes as they passed; the garter snake glided across their path; the spotted toad hopped and waddled before them, and the restless catbird mewed at them from every thicket. Had Wolfert Webber been deeply read in romantic legend he might have fancied himself entering upon forbidden, enchanted ground; or that these were some of the guardians set to keep a watch upon buried treasure. As it was, the loneliness of the place, and the wild stories connected with it, had their effect upon his mind.

On reaching the lower end of the lane they found themselves near the shore of the Sound, in a kind of amphitheatre, surrounded by forest trees. The area had once been a grass plot, but was now shagged with briars and rank weeds. At one end, and just on the river bank, was a ruined building, little better than a heap of rubbish, with a stack of chimneys rising like a solitary tower out of the center. The current of the sound rushed along just below it, with wildly grown trees drooping their branches into its waves.

Wolfert had not a doubt that this was the haunted house of father red cap, and called to mind the story of Peechy Prauw. The evening was approaching, and the light falling dubiously among these places gave a melancholy tone to the scene, well calculated to foster any lurking feeling of awe or superstition. The nighthawk, wheeling about in the highest regions of the air, emitted his peevish, boding cry. The woodpecker gave a lonely tap now and then on some hollow tree, and the firebird as he streamed by them with his deep red plumage, seemed like some genius flitting about this region of mystery.

They now came to an inclosure that had once been a garden. It extended along the foot of a rocky ridge, but was little better than a wilderness of weeds, with here and there a matted rose bush or a peach or plum tree grown wild and ragged and covered with moss. At the lower end of the garden they passed a kind of vault in the side of the bank, facing the water. It had the look of a root house. The door, though decayed, was still strong, and appeared to have been recently patched up. Wolfert pushed it open. It gave a harsh grating upon its hinges, and striking against something like a box, a rattling sound ensued and a skull rolled on the floor. Wolfert drew back shuddering, but was reassured on being informed by Sam that this was a family vault belonging to one of the old Dutch families that owned this estate; an assertion which was corroborated by the sight of coffins of various sizes piled within. Sam had been familiar with all these scenes when a boy, and now knew that he could not be far from the place of which they were in quest.

They now made their way to the water's edge, scrambling along ledges of rocks, and having often to hold by shrubs and grape vines to avoid slipping into the deep and hurried stream. At length they came to a small cove, or rather indent of the shore. It was protected by steep rocks and overshadowed by a thick copse of oaks and chestnuts, so as to be sheltered and almost concealed. The beach sloped gradually within the cove, but the current swept deep and black and rapid along its jutting points. Sam paused; raised his remnant of a hat, and scratched his grizzled poll for a moment, as he regarded this nook; then suddenly clapping his hands, he stepped exultingly forward, and pointing to a large iron ring, stapled firmly in the rock, just where a broad shelve of stone furnished a commodious landing place. It was the very spot where the red caps had landed. Years had changed the more perishable features of the scene; but rock and iron yield slowly to the influence of time. On looking more narrowly, Wolfert remarked three crosses cut in the rock just above the ring, which had no doubt some mysterious signification. Old Sam, now readily recognized the overhanging rock under which his skiff had been sheltered during the thunder gust. To follow up the course which the midnight gang had taken, however, was a harder task. His mind had been so much taken up on that eventful occasion by the persons of the drama, as to pay but little attention to the scenes; and places looked different by night and day. After wandering about for some time, however, they came to an opening among the trees which Sam thought resembled the place. There was a ledge of rock of moderate height like a wall on one side, which Sam thought might be the very ridge from which he overlooked the diggers. Wolfert examined it narrowly, and at length described three crosses similar to those above the iron ring, cut deeply into the face of the rock, but nearly obliterated by the moss that had grown on them. His heart leaped with joy, for he doubted not but they were the private marks of the buccaneers, to denote the place where their treasure lay buried. All now that remained was to ascertain the precise spot; for otherwise he might dig at random without coming upon the spoil, and he had already had enough of [illegible] by; then it was just beside a great white stone; then it must have been under a small green knoll, a short distance from the ledge of rock; until at length Wolfert became as bewildered as himself.

The shadows of evening were now spreading themselves over the woods, and rock, and tree began to mingle together. It was evidently too late to attempt anything further at present; and, indeed, Wolfert had come unprepared with implements to prosecute his researches. Satisfied, therefore, with having ascertained the place, he took note of all its landmarks, that he might recognize it again, and set out on his return homeward, resolved to prosecute this golden enterprise without delay.

The leading anxiety which had hitherto absorbed every feeling being now in some measure appeased, fancy began to wander, and to conjure up a thousand shapes and chimeras as he returned through this haunted region. Pirates hanging in chains seemed to swing on every tree, and he almost expected to see some Spanish Don, with his throat cut from ear to ear, rising slowly out of the ground, and shaking the ghost of a money bag.

Their way back lay through the desolate garden, and Wolfert's nerves had arrived at so sensitive a state that the flitting of a bird, the rustling of a leaf, or the falling of a nut was enough to startle him. As they entered the confines of the garden, they caught sight of a figure at a distance advancing slowly up one of the walks and bending under the weight of a burden. They paused and regarded him attentively. He wore what appeared to be a woolen cap, and still more alarming, of a most sanguinary red. The figure moved slowly on, ascended the bank, and stopped at the very door of the sepulchral vault. Just before entering he looked around. What was the horror of Wolfert when he recognized the grizzly visage of the drowned buccaneer. He uttered an ejaculation of horror. The figure slowly raised his iron fist and shook it with a terrible menace. Wolfert did not pause to see more, but hurried off as fast as his legs could carry him, nor was Sam slow in following at his heels, having all his ancient terrors rivived. Away, then, did they scramble, through bush and brake, horribly frightened at every bramble that tagged at their skirts, nor did they pause to breathe, until they had blundered their way through this perilous wood and had fairly reached the high road to the city.

The figure slowly raised his iron fist and shook it with a terrible menace.

Several days elapsed before Wolfert could summon courage enough to prosecute the enterprise, so much had he been dismayed by the apparition, whether living or dead, of the grizzly buccaneer. In the meantime, what a conflict of mind did he suffer! He neglected all his concerns, was moody and restless all day, lost his appetite; wandered in his thoughts and words, and committed a thousand blunders. His rest was broken; and when he fell asleep, the nightmare, in shape of a huge money bag, sat squatted upon his breast. He babbled about incalculable sums, fancied himself engaged in money digging; threw the bed clothes right and left, in the idea that he was shoveling among the dirt, groped under the bed in quest of the treasure, and lugged forth, as he supposed, an inestimable pot of gold.

Where Amber is Found.

THE DEMAND FOR IT AND THE WAY IT IS WORKED.

In Hamptvaterland one of the most important amber deposits is found, according to the San Francisco Chronicle, where on the plains of Pomerania the search after the golden gum is conducted by the peasants in the clay beds, pieces weighing several pounds often being found.

Brandenberg is also famous for its amber, but probably the most noted locality, and one that still yields an abundant supply, is the peninsula of Samland, in Prussia, that is so nearly surrounded by the waters of the Baltic. To Prof. Zaddach of the University of Konigsberg is due great credit for thoroughly investigating this celebrated locality that is a part of the forest of amber pines now situated under the bed of the Baltic in about 55° N. lat. and 37° to 38° E. lon. The amber from this ancient submerged forest is often washed ashore between Memel and Konigsberg, containing rare species of aptera, diptera, neuroptera, coleoptera, etc. The inclosed vegetable remains from their locality comprise four species of pines, cedar, cypress, juniper, yew, oak, poplar, birch, ash, a few ferns, mosses, liverworts, conferval, fungi, etc. The amber appears here to have not only exuded from the root stock, but also from the bark and the wood, as is the case with the copal anime. The northern part of the peninsula, which is extremely hilly and rough, forms the promontory of Brusterort, a most picturesque country and forbidding from the sea, the cliffs rising from 160 to 350 feet in height, and breasting the Baltic with a bold front. In former years the deposits were owned and managed exclusively by the German empire, and so valuable was the interest that it was kept under the direct control of the army and watched by a corps of gendarmes detailed for the purpose. Even the lucky finds of peasant ploughmen who owned farms in the vicinity were claimed, and the finders rewarded with an amount equivalent to one-tenth of the value. One piece found here weighed 18 pounds, and brought the fortunate finder $1,000. It is rather doubtful, however, whether he received his just dues, as, when the specimen was placed in the collection of the Berlin Museum, it was valued at $30,000.

Perfect specimens are worth their weight in gold. Some of the richest finds have been made alongshore after storms, where the amber would be seen entangled with the seaweed, and so valuable were these finds that companies were formed and search made by means of submarine diving bells, and with such success that the submerged lignite beds along the coast were completely despoiled.

When first obtained by the finder, amber is placed in vaults made near at hand for its reception, and arranged in baskets or boxes, according to its size, purity, color, etc.; and, in one of the vaults on the Baltic—that of Pachter Douglass—can be seen the records of yearly finds as far back as the year 1500.

The greatest demand for amber comes from eastern Europe, Turkey, Persia and the countries of the Orient, where it is used for mouthpieces for pipes or worked up into beads. Knowing the exact requirements of the trade the dealers divide it into classes; the finest pieces are forwarded to Constantinople or Bagdad in the rough, where they are cut into mouthpieces for pipes, as the smokers still believe that the gum possesses the property of preventing contagion. The pieces of the second class are cut into beads, while those of the third are used for the distillation of succinic acid, the residue of which is the well known colophonium succini used in the manufacture of varnish, and for many [illegible] [illegible] are often obtained by simple means. It has been found exceedingly flexible at a certain temperature, and thus the old method of softening it in linseed oil has been done away with, and, instead, the piece is subjected to a certain heat over a lamp, and by an expert can be drawn by the hand into any shape desired. In this manner a skilled workman with his hands will produce a pipe stem nearly two feet long from an amber coil fifteen inches in circumference. After being drawn into the required length in this manner, the amber is cut and then treated to a lathe, and finally polished by lathe or hand with pumice, whiting or alcohol.

It is asserted by King and Feuchtwanger in their several works on gems that amber can be cut and bolted down. This statement, obviously incorrect, is probably owing to the fact that there has quite recently been discovered in an Irish tumulus an amber cup, capable of holding half a pint; the surmise being that it could not have been cut from a single block, but was moulded. If such was the case it is a lost art, notwithstanding the statement of the distinguished authorities on gems mentioned. The late Czar of Russia possessed a tea set cut from solid amber blocks, and various museums own receptacles of various kinds, all cut from the block.

In this country amber has been found in the tertiary deposits at Gay Head, Camden and Cape Sable, while imperfect specimens have been taken from the green sand of New Jersey. At present there is no demand for it, and only at rare intervals is there a call for sets, so they can be obtained at comparatively low prices. Though a drug in the jewelry market, it is in demand by smokers, and is closely imitated by glass paste and various compositions. The best deception is uncolored celluloid, while turpentine and caoutchouc, linseed oil, gum mastic and litharge, to which has been added finely powdered copal, are used. The latter, with the addition of ants of deal commonly, is the amber affected by the cheap smoker. The difference between this and the genuine is easily shown by burning a small portion of the composition, which will melt and drop.

Chemically considered, amber bears a close resemblance to recent gums, copal, mastic, ambrite, retinite, etc., the difference consisting, probably, in the arrangement of the molecules alone. Its specific gravity is about 1070, and it contains a trace of odorous volatile oil easily soluble in alcohol, and an insoluble resin, which is its chief constituent (80 or 90 per cent.) Distilled per se it yields inflammable gases, water holding succinic and acetic acids, and empyreumatic oil in solution (the spirit of amber of old pharmacy), sublimed succinic acid (salt of amber) and an empyreumatic oil (oil of amber). The acid, when purified, amounts to from 3 to 5 per cent. The residual charcoal amounts to 12 or 13 per cent. and when strongly heated yields a little volatile matter resembling camphor.

A difference between amber and other resins is noticed in the lesser brittleness of the former and its susceptibility to electric action. The golden yellow color is most treasured, although it is often found in all shades from white to black. The milk-white or cloudy varieties are much prized by connoisseurs, and pipe stems from this in Constantinople bring from $50 to $200. Some smokers prefer red amber, which is produced by treating the gum to a bath of sulphuric acid. Green amber has been found on our own shores. The black is common in Sicily, according to M. Le Conte de Berch. Some specimens imported from Portugal to New York have been analyzed with the following result: Carbon, 81.57; hydrogen, 7.70; oxygen and nitrogen, 0.08; ash, .65; which is so entirely different from the showing of pure amber that the suggestion has been prompted that the so-called "black amber" variety is merely a fine quality of jet or highly oxidized bitumen. Chemically, it seems intermediate between cannel coal and torbanite. Even the woody fibre is noticed under the glass, yet it possesses great electric power, and shares alike many of the valued qualities of the yellow variety, that seems perpetuated to preserve intact the records of a lost age unto all time.

Do you suffer from scrofula, salt rheum, or other humors? Take Hood's Sarsaparilla, the great blood purifier. 100 doses one dollar. 7

Mr. R. F. Whatley is a prominent merchant of Ruston, La. He says that he has sold Swift's Specific to many persons, and knows of some wonderful cases of blood diseases, and has never heard of a failure to cure. Several cases of contagious blood poison were cured after all the doctors and all other remedies had failed. 34

KISSED ANOTHER MAN'S WIFE.
"You scoundrel!" yelled young Jacob Green,
At his good neighbor, Brown,—
"You kissed my wife upon the street,—
I ought to knock you down,"
"That's where you're wrong," good Brown replied,
In accents mild and meek;
"I kissed her, that I've not denied,
But kissed her on the cheek—
and I did it because she looked so handsome—the very picture of beauty and health. What is the secret of it?" "Well," replied Green, "since you ask it, I will tell you; she uses Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. I accept your apology. Good night." "Favorite Prescription" is the only remedy for the delicate derangements and weaknesses of females. Sold by druggists, under a positive guarantee of giving satisfaction in every case, or money paid for it returned.

For billiousness, sick headache, indigestion, and constipation, take Dr. Pierce's Pellets. July12 &wlw

Notice of Petition for Discharge.

STATE OF MAINE.

PENOBSCOT ss., Court of Insolvency.

In the case of George Joss, Insolvent Debtor.

Notice is hereby given that a petition has, this third day of July, A. D. 1889, been presented to said Court for said County by George Joss of Bangor, in the County of Penobscot, praying that he may be decreed a full discharge from all his debts, provable under chapter seventy of the Revised Statutes of the State of Maine, and the amendments thereof, and upon said Petition. It is ordered by said Court that a hearing be had upon the same before said Court, at the Probate Court Room in Bangor, in said County of Penobscot, on Wednesday, the 24th day of July, A. D. 1889, at ten o'clock in the forenoon; and that notice thereof be published in the Bangor Daily Whig and Courier, a newspaper published in said County of Penobscot, once a week for two successive weeks, the last publication to be seven days at least before the day of hearing; and that all creditors who have proved their debts, and other persons interested, may appear at said place and time, and show cause, if any they have, why a discharge should not be granted said Debtor, according to the prayer of his petition.

Attest: AMBROSE C. FLINT, Register of said Court for said County of Penobscot.
